Older now, winds blow down, aware of life s danger zones; follow rules of the road. (From Forevermore ) Charles P. Russ, Jr. now follows and measures each new day as a prized possession, held only for moments in time, precarious and fleeting. There are times of refueling in order to keep promises made to oneself, to family and friends. And now, in waning years, the wise sage becomes more keenly aware of each wind of change and life s danger zones. Of utmost importance, one must constantly be ever acute in following the rules of the road. The sage in Charles P. Russ, Jr. begs the reader to beware, yet to enjoy the journey, tenable at its best!
