Not illustrated. 1919 Excerpt: .in the cost values of records and reports, and a foreman should so regard it, taking all possible precautions to see that all records and reports cover all facts that they are supposed to cover. The cost value of records and reports not kept in the prescribed form and manner.--When records or reports are called for on a prescribed form, there is a reason. For example, if a number of reports or records are to be looked over by one person, or compared, or consolidated; when the same information appears in the same place on all of them the work is much easier and hence cheaper, since it saves time, nerves, and reduces chance of error. Even where a foreman keeps records solely for his own use he will save cost if he keeps them in some uniform way, not on odd paper of an old blank book or on scraps of paper or chalked upon a board. All of these things and many others justify the statement that keeping records and making reports in a uniform way cuts cost, and, in proportion, as a foreman does it, cost goes down and in addition, in many cases, he is giving better cooperation to the management. The cost value of not keeping records and reports up to date.--The habit of letting records run and then making them up in a bunch is a costly one. In the first place, records made in this way are much more...
