We all do fade as a leaf. --Isa. Lxiv. 6. I. When autumn winds have swept above, And strewed with death the plain, Some scattered trees in every grove Their withered leaves retain. Ii. The oak, and, oftener still, the beech, With foliage curled and sere Half covered oer are seen, while each Have leafless kindred near. Iii. No eye can trace why these are bare, And those are clothed yet: The winds have whistled every where, And warred with all they met. Iv. Twouldseem, despite the blast, were left, Where every eye might scan, The more for branches round bereft, A warning still for man. He might forget what death has wrought, And what he yet will do, Were all his victims sunk to nought; So some remain in view. Mortal, awake! each withered leaf, So lightly hung on high, Reminds thee that thy day is brief, And says-- Prepare to die! Vii. Prepare to die! that warning sent Is wisdoms voice from Heaven; For life, however else tis spent, To learn to die was given. Viii. This, this our one great work below--And oh! if finished well, What mind the bright reward can know What seraphs lips could tell Ix. But, haply, thoughts of coming death But gloom and sadness give: Then, hear another voice which saith, Awake, arise, and live. x. Gaze not upon the wintry boughs, With mournful symbols rife; But turn thee now while heaven allows,...
